

Please do not do anything that would weaken Wisconsin's No-Call law. My life has been much more pleasant since the telemarketers stopped calling. Theirs probably are too, since I have never done business on the basis of a cold telephone call.

If you are considering that banks should be able to contact former customers using telemarketing tools, I ask that you reconsider the wisdom of such a policy. Customers who stop using a bank's services do so because they do not want to use the bank's services. Providing an exemption for banks (or other such service providers) to contact former customers amounts to state-sanctioned harassment.

Don't do it.
